Olinger et al. holographically measured the atomization effect of liquid jet in subsonic air crossflow and reconstructed the spray field in three dimensions. Numerous regime maps for predicting the primary breakup modes of a non-turbulent liquid jet injected into subsonic air crossflow have been proposed in the literature.

It can be achieved in many ways including spraying through nozzle, pouring on to a rotating disc, etc. Atomization practice and research usually involve materials processing in their liquid state either at or near room temperature (oil-based liquids, paint spraying, aerosol sprays, etc.) or at high temperature (metal melts).
