What Is Environmental Perception? (with pictures)

Environmental risk perception stimulates people ' s sense of urgency and responsibility to protect the environment and encourages more environmental protection behaviors [1, 2, 8]. However, other scholars have found that there is a discrepancy between environmental risk perception and environmental protection behaviors [9, 10].

Journal Description: Environment and Behavior: SAGE Journals
Environmental cues in a residential area are important. Clean gutters and residents' staring behavior tell outsiders that they have been noticed. Holiday decorations make a clear statement that the residents are house-proud and competitive. Many euphemisms are used to describe this behavior, such as pride, cohesiveness, and community spirit.

The Value Belief Norm approach offers a good account for the causes of the general predisposition toward pro-environmental behavior. Environmental practices depend on a broad range of causal factors, both general and behavior-specific. A general theory of environmentalism may therefore not be very useful for changing specific behaviors.
