Five UN human rights experts released a statement Thursday calling for the comprehensive revision of France's new global security bill that seeks to strengthen and reinforce "security continuum" in the country. The experts called the bill "incompatible with international human rights law" and said that the French Parliament needs to reevaluate the purpose of the bill as a whole.

First published in Inside Arbitration, Issue 6 Despite its significance, the Convention is actually a very unassuming document. It is a mere 5 pages long, made up of 16 Articles, with a surprising directness to the drafting. One questions whether a treaty of this nature would look quite so minimalist if it were to be negotiated today. The global reach of the Convention is
