Because memory is not just an individual, private experience but is also part of the collective domain, cultural memory has become a topic in both historiography and cultural studies. These emphasize cultural memory’s process and its implications and objects, respectively. Two schools of thought have emerged, one articulates that the present shapes our understanding of the past. The other assumes that the past has an influence on our present behavior. It has, however, been pointed out that ...

The Cultural Memory strand is about memory as placing, cultural connection and creation. It is led by Professor Juliet Simpson FRSA, FRHistS. Research within the Cultural Memory strand explores the significance of sites, objects, artworks, images and texts in shaping identities of memory and belonging. Asking new and in-depth questions about why the past matters now and for future memory-making, it encompasses art works, places, cultures and communities – how and in what ways their ...

Cultural memory studies is a field to which many disciplines contribute, using their specific methodologies and perspectives. This makes for its terminological richness, but also for its disjointedness. At the same time, it has been clear since its very inception that the study of cultural memory can only be successful if it is based
