As the United States' wars in Afghanistan and Iraq continue,increasing numbers of students who experienced combat will enrollin colleges and universities. There is mounting evidence that theseveterans will require support unique to their needs beyond theprocessing of financial aid paperwork from the VeteransAdministration. Institutions of higher education traditionally have responded tothe needs of special student populations by developing programs andoffering services. This volume contains information aboutprogrammatic initiatives that can help create a welcomingenvironment for veterans, one that encourages serious, creativeinvolvement. The authors bring broad experience and deliberatereconsideration to bear on questions that are only becoming moreimportant to the entire spectrum of American colleges anduniversities. The individual chapters cover theoretical and conceptual developments and innovative methodological designs, while also exploring practical implications. Language learning psychology is a vibrant field of research that typically involves constructs from social and educational psychology, which it considers in terms of their relevance for the domain of language learning. The diverse theoretical and empirical chapters examine a range of familiar and lesser-known constructs, highlighting the importance of taking into account both learner and teacher psychologies, and recognising the complexity, dynamism and situatedness of psychological constructs, as well as the value of employing diverse research methodologies. It is hoped that these 'new directions' concerning populations, constructs and theoretical and methodological frameworks will pave the way for innovative future developments in this vibrant field.
