~~Up until this tax year, property managers have been sending and reporting 1099-MISC forms for all income not taxed by the IRS:all income you paid out to vendors, legal consultants, contractors, and owners. This year is different. For the first time since 1982, the IRS has broken out non-employee compensation into a separate form: the 1099-NEC. In this post, we'll cover what the new form is, how it affects the existing 1099-MISC, and what the net impact is for property managers.~~

~~The new 1099-NEC and what it means for property managers~~

~~No need to file a vendor or owner 1099 when the payments in a calendar year total less than $600 or were made to purchase goods not services. In addition, there are a few additional exceptions to the 1099 requirements for property managers. 1099-MISC Exception: 1099s need not be filed if the rental property owner is a corporation. This means if a corporation owns the rental property, you do not need to submit a 1099 MISC form to document owner distributions sent to the corporation.~~

~~As a "pass through" entity, the property manager must issue 1099-MISC form (s) to the property owner (s) and IRS, and submit a 1096 to the IRS summarizing the 1099-MISC form (s) issued to property owner (s). The rental income and expenses are not income and expenses of the property manager's business. Maybe here's an example:~~

~~Solved: Do I need to issue 1099-MISC to my investment~~

~~The sole purpose of filing a 1099 for rental property investors is to help the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) keep track of income generated from non-employment-related activities. Form 1099-MISC, in particular, represents an attempt on behalf of the IRS to keep track of miscellaneous incomes that otherwise wouldn't appear on a traditional W-2.~~
