Social Change and Development: Modernization, Dependency ...

During the past four decades, the field of development has been dominated by three schools of research. The 1950s saw the modernization school, the 1960s experienced the dependency school, the 1970s developed the new world-system school, and the 1980s is a convergence of all three schools. Alvin Y. So examines the dynamic nature of these schools of development--what each of them represents, their contributions, how they have criticized each other, how they have defended themselves, and how ...

Modernization theory stresses the functional necessity of efficient bureaucracy for welfare state development because, without it, effective taxation and administration of complex distributional programs is simply impossible. Bureaucracy, once erected, may also come to play an active role in decision-making and thus determine policy evolution.

Modernization Theory - an overview | ScienceDirect Topics

Hence, modernisation implied a change in the value system. The West was seen as the blueprint for development and modernisation was regarded as 'the process of change towards those types of social, economic, and political systems that have developed in Western Europe and North America' (Eisenstadt 1966 p. 1).

1.1 Development as modernisation and economic growth

Modernization theory both attempts to identify the social variables that contribute to social progress and development of societies and seeks to explain the process of social evolution. Modernization theory is subject to criticism originating among socialist and free-market ideologies, world-systems theorists, globalization theorists and dependency theorists among others.

Modernization theory - Wikipedia

Considered at the most general level, this point suggests a view of modernization as a process of individualization, differentiation or specialization, and abstraction. Put more concretely: first, the structures of modern society take as their basic unit the individual rather than, as with agrarian or peasant society, the group or community.

Modernization - The nature of modern society | Britannica

Education is therefore considered as a prime mover of social change and modernization. The bearings of modern education on social mobility is studied in great detail by Goldthrope. Collecting data from industrially developed societies, he finds out that how education has contributed for the 60% working class children to get into supervisory and semi-skilled occupational positions whereas 20% of ...
