frame story is a narrative written to set the stage for a series of shorter stories. This technique helps to heighten the drama and suspense of the entire tale. The main frame story of Arabian Nights tells the tale of the ruler Shahryar and of Scheherazade. Shahryar discovers that both his brother's wife and his own wife have been unfaithful.

The authors of the Arabian Nights did not view the Christians as monolithic, undifferentiated, and adversarial villains, as some critics have argued. The single story about the Coptic Egyptian in China in the 14th-century Syrian manuscript reflected an idyllic and invented past, invoked through the figure of a caliph who ruled an empire never perturbed by external or internal upheavals, diseases, or invading armies.
