The central thesis of Fritjof Capra's 'The science of Leonardo' is that Leonardo was the founder of the scientific method rather than Galileo a century later. He has a point, but since Leonardo's notebooks were only recently indexed in full, it is hardly relevant for the actual history of science. More thought provoking is mr.

Fritjof Capra (bestseller of The Tao of Physics), himself a man of science, has been interested in Leonardo for decades, an interest that he has materialized lately in several books on Leonardo's work and thinking, one of which I had the privilege to translate into Spanish (La Botánica de Leonardo). In "The Science of Leonardo" Capra explores, through the respectful eyes of a scientist for another, the already mentioned multidimensional mind of the Toscana genius Leonardo's scientific explorations were extraordinarily wide-ranging. He studied the flight patterns of birds to create some of the first human flying machines. Using his understanding of weights and levers and trajectories and forces, he designed military weapons and defenses, and was in fact regarded as one of the foremost military engineers of his era.
