This is just another manifestation of an old colonial belief, the white man's burden, or the belief that white men had to take care of the rest of the world's people because they were incapable of taking care of themselves. Great find, Kenjus! This post originally appeared in 2008. Lisa Wade, PhD is a Visiting Scholar at Tulane University.

Josephine Butler's campaign on behalf of Indian women is one example of imperial feminism in action. A review of feminist periodical literature reveals that British feminists constructed the image of a helpless Indian womanhood on whom their own emancipation in the imperial nation state ultimately relied.

(Original post by loggins) I understand the term "White Woman's Burden", as being a literary expression referring to the myths and stereotypes attached to women (and their expected roles) in the course of history. The way cultures and societies assign roles to particular genders is an issue that many authors are aware of, and so seek to challenge.
